Description of the course: More people seem to be searching for ways to express themselves through painting; find their own style, be more creative, create atmospheres, trigger emotions in their own original style or learn where and how to exhibit and start a painting career. But how does one learn how to do this? To be honest with you I have never seen these areas being taught anywhere. Why? I think it is just too hard to teach in a group, it would take individualized courses adapted to the person's needs, desires, level and goals.

You are the key to your painting; that is the real secret. Who you are and how you feel dictates what and how you paint ; your choice of colour and tonal values, your choice of subject, technique and style are all part of who you are. In painting, just as in life, we have blockages and habits that hinder our progress, and it is precisely by working with our strengths and weaknesses that we proceed to create our own personal style.

With HHE, I propose this year to help you find this liberty. A liberty that will allow you real positive and creative evolution.

The length of the program is 1 month. There is no limit to the exchanges between us. It is at your own pace.

With HHE, you will benefit from a course adapted to your needs.

With HHE, you will work simultaneously your Head, Hand and Eye in order to ensure real and rapid improvement in your painting.

With HHE, you will:

- Learn how to improve your creativity.
- Learn what works and what doesn't and WHY!
- Learn how to master tonal values and colours.
- Learn how to create colour schemes to suit your subject and mood.
- Learn how to improve your compositions.
- The watercolour techniques ; why and when to use them.
- Learn to see your habits, strengths and weaknesses and use them intelligently.
- Exercises to improve your drawing skills.
- If desired information to help you start or improve your exhibition possibilities and results.
- All this information is available to you after the course to allow you to keep progressing.

Malcolm Carver

From architecture to watercolour

AUSTRALIAN ARTIST MALCOLM CARVER DRAWS HIS WATERCOLOUR KNOW-HOW FROM HIS YEARS OF EXPERIENCE AS AN ARCHITECT. HE SPEAKS HERE OF HIS

SOURCES OF INSPIRATION, CHOICE OF SUBJECTS AND THEIR TREATMENT.

The Iconic Tower, Paddington, Sydney.
76 x 26 cm.

The Art of Watercolour: How did you get started with art and watercolour in particular?

Malcolm Carver: Having loved drawing from early childhood I became an architect, a job that required graphic skills to communicate with clients well before the advent of computers. Manual drawings, physical 3D models and constant freehand sketching were the tools of the trade. Working drawings for construction were coloured in watercolour to delineate materials and finishes and although computers in architecture have now significantly changed the process, sketching remains an invaluable skill, one that has spontaneity, speed, simple linework, minimal detail and is a great communication tool. Colour should be minimal. I have always sketched everyday. It allows me to carefully observe, filter the essentials and capture a moment in time. It's important to know when to leave the sketch, often unfinished, never overworked. Watercolour is a natural progression, always with some light pencil work and a technique, described by others, as 'drawing with a brush' rather than a pencil. Same process different result. My preference is always for minimal colours with a limited palette and no greens!

“Don’t always paint from light to dark, sometimes it is best to add dark first in order to ‘nail’ the light.”

TAW: What do you wish you knew about watercolours before you started?

M. C.: I wish I had realised earlier on the exquisite qualities of this transparent medium and acknowledged that it is not a ‘colouring in’ medium. The transition to discovering that it was really all about light and tone and not colour took too long. It was frustrating. We are all often misdirected at school and at home to colouring in. It’s lazy to follow that path. Studying Chinese calligraphy and observing students overworking their watercolours with excessive brushstrokes has taught me to be more sparing. I also wish I had learnt to appreciate the effects of letting the watercolour run on the paper, instead of painting inside shapes.

TAW: What is the best part about working in this technique?

M. C.: The best thing is when you simply let it happen! What a joy to see the pigments flowing and creating other subtle colours as they mix on the paper. Yes it’s an experimental process, although with a little knowledge of which colours run well together you really can let go. I also enjoy making luminous greys rather than using premixed pigments and this has reinforced my ambition to use less pigments rather than more, and to do so with more freedom and confidence. In watercolour, some happy accidents really are happy, so my advice is to leave certain results and not to tamper and overwork through excessive brushwork. One stroke is better than ten. Maintain an experimental approach, stop, sit back and watch and above all don’t correct prematurely.

TAW: Have you ever experienced a creative block?

M. C.: No. As the time to execute a watercolour is relatively short compared to a major oil painting, you simply need to be proactive and move on to a new subject. I travel a lot so I’m never shy of another subject.

TAW: What is vital to painting a good watercolour?

M. C.: Spending enough time in preparation, doing thumbnail and outline sketches and using acute observation skills to discern critical shapes with depth. It is also vital to have a clear understanding where the primary light source is and the resulting shadows for a 3-dimensional effect. Finally paint with passion along a proven pathway.

TAW: What are some of the most common mistakes that you see when teaching beginners?

M. C.: Poor observation skills, an inability to see tone through squinting, a lack of understanding of the importance of light in the subject and using the watercolour medium like poster paints, with an incorrect belief that it’s all about colour. It’s not about colour it’s about tone. Beginners also don’t take into account enough that the white paper is the lightest value and have little appreciation for the need to understand transparency.

TAW: How did you find your style?

M. C.: My style came from progressive focused practice and experimentation. You can take inspiration from as many watercolourists as you like, but avoid consciously copying

“The best piece of advice I’ve ever been given was by the Australian artist Lloyd Rees (1893-1986). He said: ‘Look for the light and you will find it.’” another artist’s exact style. I began to appreciate my own work, which evolved as I gained confidence. I did not seek the advice of my family, but rather fellow artists I respect. I was self-critical, but also kept some past work to bear witness to my progress over time. I tried not to be timid, tried a bit of bravado, and became confident with different types of stroke making e.g. single dry brush strokes with little water and lots of juicy pigment. Everyone has their own inimitable style and may also be influenced by others. I watched how others did things, with constant regular practice being the key. My thumbnail sketches are sometimes more beautiful due to lower expectations of success.

TAW: How has your style changed over the years?

M. C.: There are always subtle variations in one’s style that are sometimes dictated by subject matter. Overall, I would say I have a loose, fresh style, which has always been my ambition, although I don’t get it right every time. As watercolour is an experimental medium, one needs to be self-critical and prepared to discard, or not sign certain works so as to strive for excellence.

TAW: How have your painting materials changed since you first started?

M. C.: Dramatically! Over the years I have bought every conceivable type of brush, falsely believing you need a variety of tools. I learnt the hard and expensive way. Being a traveller I was also hard on brushes, particularly the points. Over many years I gradually began to minimise the number of

MALCOLM’S ADVICE ON HOW TO PROGRESS IN YOUR WORK

Try to practice and gain confidence in observation in order to improve your drawing skills above all else. Learning to see rather than drawing from ‘memory’ is fundamental and crucial prior to painting. Secondly experiment with abstract shapes and fresh blues, browns and clean water. Tilt the sheet and let them run together so that you can understand the importance of ‘stitching the painting together’ with multiple greys, before looking for the coloured elements. Taking a fresh and loose approach can break any old habits of colouring in. Try to stop putting in excessive detail in the hope of saving something and believe in yourself. Find the confidence to accept the result. Don’t go back and fiddle with it. Practice makes perfect.

Experiment with blue and brown pigments and clean water: letting them flow and mix will help you to understand how colours blend together.

brushes and now have literally one multi-purpose brush, plus a 40 mm wide hake for broad washes, a cheap bristle brush for lifting out colour and a fan brush for some landscape effects. My multi-purpose brush I now have made especially for me: it's a 6-mm wide, short synthetic dagger in a travel format to protect the point.

TAW: What qualities keep you faithful to watercolour?

M. C.: Its freshness of colour and loose sketchy style. The luminous colours, clarity in gradation of depicted light, use of the white of the paper and transparency that lets other layers shine through. Also the cauliflowers and blooms that can be delightful, particularly in landscapes. Let them happen.

TAW: What objectives are you striving for right now?

M. C.: Having been committed to teaching over the past ten years, I am enormously grateful to the many people with whom I've shared my watercolour world and skills. Whilst this has been immensely rewarding, I now selfishly wish to focus on my own work and raise the consistency and quality of my painting. When travelling you also miss the deadlines for potential group exhibitions and gallery obligations. Perhaps a more discerning selection of workshops will enable me to keep up the travel and teaching opportunities, whilst hopefully leaving me more time to meet my personal expectations and obtain accolades and awards that might prove worthwhile.

I COULDN'T DO WITHOUT...

... An iPad with the 'Valueviewer' app installed. Ok we can all squint, but this app developed for the Plein Air Artists of America enables tones to be clearly viewed in your photos, both outdoors and in the studio. Using the Valueviewer app to check my tones can also help me ascertain that the end is near.

COMPOSITION

- Accurate drawing is fundamental. Try not to distort the subject, because good painting won't fix a poor drawing. Work fast and don't overwork your brushstrokes. One stroke with conviction wins every time.
- Be aware that light does not magically appear at the end. Capture the light from the very first step and then preserve and enhance it until the very end.
- Protect the primary strong light direction and seek consistency and continuity throughout, particularly with shadows to reveal the 3D shapes. Seek out reflected light and ensure shadows have hard and soft edges.

TOOLS AND PAPER

I own a circular travel palette with sealed lids for a maximum of 12 warm and cool colours with no mixing wells. Having begun with cold pressed or rough paper many years ago, I have also experimented with 'Yupo' for a short time, which provided inspiration for allowing colours to move together with scary but interesting results. I have found similar attributes with hot press smooth paper, but with more control and great results in moving colour washes about.

MY COLOURS

I recommend Winsor & Newton pigments for my workshops as they are readily available worldwide. I use Winsor & Newton colours supplemented with Daniel Smith (USA) to provide slightly more variety in my studio work. Here is my W & N palette:

- Quinacridone Magenta
- Cadmium Red
- Cadmium Orange
- Raw Sienna
- Cadmium Yellow Pale
- Quinacridone Gold
- Burnt Sienna
- Neutral Tint
- Daveys Gray
- Cerulean Blue
- French Ultramarine Blue
- Ultramarine Violet

FINDING A SUBJECT

I constantly look for 'images' and take numerous photographs with my iPhone. The larger works, A3 to full sheet, begin as small sketches in travel sketch books or more recently on an iPad. This is a constant filtering process of selecting my favourite photos, always looking for interesting subjects with exceptional light, doing numerous sketches of special subjects and ultimately doing larger paintings to show exceptional light opportunities.

Demo Burns Bay

HERE THE DRAMATIC COMPOSITION IS FRAMED SO AS TO CREATE A DISTINCT SENSE OF DEPTH TO THE BACKGROUND ISLAND PROFILE.

1 THE DRAWING

The success of painting begins with looking at and understanding the subject. Start with an accurate drawing, noting in particular how the light and shadows fall on shapes. The drawing process requires close observation of the subject. Sketch lightly and freely, but keep the waterline parallel with the top of the sheet. To retain the white in the boat and ripples I use masking fluid sparingly. Incline the backing board at a 35 degree angle.

3 USE DARKS TO PUSH THE BACKGROUND FURTHER AWAY

Paint shadow areas in mid-ground areas in stronger darks and drop fresh and juicy splats of burnt sienna and ultramarine blue into the wet areas. The darks create the mood of early light. Try not to mix the colours in the palette, but allow them to mix on the paper to preserve freshness. Indicate the tree trunks and foliage without leaves!

5 THEN AT LAST... ADD THE DETAILS

Keep the boat waterlines horizontal to suggest that the water is still. Burnish the mid-ground landscape shapes with a stiff bristle brush and water and lift out colour to suggest light in the foliage. Add further darks into the foliage. Use a white gel pen sparingly to suggest the details of the boats' reflections and masts. Finish with the signature!

Burns Bay,
Sydney Harbour.
26 x 76 cm.

2 LAYING IN THE BACKGROUND AREAS

Begin painting the distant shore in warm and cool grey colours to block in areas, leaving the white of the distant boats facing the light and some suggestion of buildings. Keep the whole background in the lightest tone. Ensure the background shape with the sky has soft blurred edges to create a perception of depth. Add a touch of burnt sienna and magenta into the bead. Allow the bead to create a 'cauliflower effect' to suggest trees.

4 THE BIG WASH

Use masking tape to block out the boat shapes and then begin a graduated wash for the water with cerulean and ultramarine blue. Apply this wash slowly, adding stronger pigment into the wash as you work down with long 'Z' strokes. Overlay a cerulean and ultramarine blue wash, slowly adding thicker pigment into the wash as you work down. When dry, rub off the masking fluid and remove the tape.
